Welcome Back Junior Theater Festival Friends and Family!

First and foremost, I hope you and your loved ones are continuing to weather the pandemic as best as possible. These are still very difficult times, although the light at the end of the tunnel seems to be shining brighter each passing day and that gives me hope.

I have been moved to tears by the resiliency of our theatre community. Watching us all pivot from live and in-person productions to online shows, and then pivot again, and again, and yet again, has reminded me just how strong we all are.

Over the past year, I've also had the honor of speaking with many of you. Sharing our tears and fears was cathartic. Imagining a new theatre that is more inclusive, that tackles systemic racism, and that continues to make this world a better place has inspired me. It also gave me the motivation I needed to take a step forward on days when getting out of bed was tough.

Most of all, I cannot wait to be back in our JTF theaters, with you, our jazz hand warriors, making theatre IN PERSON.

As of this writing, our JTF team is hard at work planning our inaugural JTF Texas. This will be the first time we convene inside a theater since March of 2020, and we are working with experts to ensure this gathering meets all local, state, federal, and CDC guidelines. We are applying what we learn at JTF Texas to JTF Atlanta and JTF West, because your safety and health is of the utmost importance to us.

It is impossible to project what programming will be like in January or February of 2022. Please rest assured that we are committed to producing both festivals LIVE AND IN PERSON. I look forward to breaking out our jazz hands and spirit fingers and raising the roof in full musical theatre joy with each of you!

So help us Sondheim!
